British Professor to Help Recruit Staff For Our University

LONDON—Professor Norman Haycocks, Professor of Education and Deputy Vice-Chancellor of Britain's Nottingham University, is having talks with Government departments and in his own University in the hope of recruiting more staff to serve in West Africa.

This follows a six weeks tour in Ghana and Nigeria where he was impressed with the atmosphere of zest and eagerness for education to expand at all levels and with the "very high level of ability of those holding responsible positions in education."

The object of the tour organised by the British Council, was to enable the Professor, as Chairman of his University's Committee for the Secondment of Staff to Universities in Developing Countries to familiarise himself with the problems of West African universities, especially in staffing matters.

During his tour, Professor Haycocks visited all five universities in Nigeria and three in Ghana. He also visited technical institutes, teachers' training colleges of all grades, and secondary and primary schools.

In both countries he had noticed a tendency towards development in the sciences engineering and agricultural science, which was 'very wise' in view of the countries' own internal needs; and a concern by the universities to help solve the shortages of graduate teachers, he said.

Annual Report of Broadcasting:

B.B.C. Cover The World In News

LONDON...In 1955 there were 237 million radio sets in the world; today the figure is about 400 million, and in some of the developing countries the number has been doubling almost every year. This phenomenal growth in radio sets; the establishment of new broadcasting systems all over the world and the expansion of others both internally and externally, are among the points noted in the Annual Report of the BBC for 1962-63 in referring to increasing competition in the field of external broadcasting. But despite this stiffening competition, states the Report; the reputation of the BBC External Service (which broadcast in English and 40 other languages) remain as high as ever. Audience studies have confirmed in a number of areas the extend of listening to the BBC, and a significant and encouraging feature emerging from these studies is that BBC programmes have a particular appeal for younger people.

Thus, half the listeners in the U.S.S.R. whose ages were established were under thirty (and information came from 75 towns), and two-thirds of those in France are under twenty. There is reason to believe, says the report, "that a similar situation exists in many other parts of the world. A recent survey of listening in Morocco showed that a higher proportion of people under the age of thirty listened to the BBC, and the same result has been found in other surveys."

Many listeners referred appreciatively to the reliable information provided by the BBC. For example two recent surveys outside Europe, one in South Vietnam and one in Egypt, have shown that the BBC is regarded by listeners as the most reliable source of world news, taking into account even local radios and newspapers.

Similar appreciation was found in Eastern Europe, and one example quoted, for a report which reached was found the BBC from the Eastern Zone of Germany, illustrates again that younger as well as older people value BBC broadcasts. "I am a worker in Wittenberg, 22 years old," it ran, "and I like to listen to you. There is no radio station which reports in such detail and so truthfully about world events as does London radio. Please accept sincere thanks, and carry on like that. We need you."

Happy New Year.

British Sixth Formers To Learn About Nigeria

LONDON — British sixth-formers from over one-hundred schools will learn about Nigeria during a study conference on the Commonwealth next month arranged by the Royal Commonwealth Society in London

The two-day conference is called "The Commonwealth looks at itself." Outlining Nigeria's viewpoint will be Mallam Osman Ahmadu-Suka, First Secretary and Education Attache in the High Commission of the Federal Republic of Nigeria in London.

After an address by Mallam Ahmadu-Suka, entitled Africa looks at the Commonwealth the sixth-formers along with a number of Nigerian students in London will break up discussion groups, with the address as the theme. Later there will be questions to the speaker.

The Commonwealth study conference, to be presided over by Sir Hilary Blood, a former Governor of the Gambia, will also include speakers from Canada, Australia, and India.
