Police Dog Expert Flying To Nigeria

LONDON—A policeman who trained one of Britain's top teams of police dogs is flying to Lagos on 7th March to help build up a police dog force in Nigeria.

He is 28-year-old Constable Peter Stephenson of the Middlesbrough Police Force, and his first task in Nigeria will be to help select a team of dog handlers. He will spend three weeks in Nigeria before returning to Britain with the team for training, probably with the Metropolitan Police in London.

The training course in Britain will last for about a month, after which Constable Stephenson will return to Nigeria with the team to take up an appointment as Assistant Superintendent. His wife and two sons will go with him.

Constable Stephenson was responsible for training the Middlesbrough police dogs when they won the British National Police Dog trials in Britain in 1961.

A REJOINDER:

Chief Akintola Not Boomed

The following letter was received from Mr. Taju Thompson in connection with a news item which was published in a local daily the other day: "There was a piece of news item in the 'Daily Express' of 19th Inst. that Chief S.L. Akintola, the Premier of the Western Region was boomed when he paid a friendly visit to few of his supporters in Lagos.

The fact of the case was that the Chief during the visit to the persons named in the report was warmily welcomed by his supporters and well-wishers in the Ward as well as other admirers who expressed great pleasure in having the chance to meet the Premier in person and also having the opportunity to shake hands with him.

"There was nothing like booming or jeering.

Yours faithfully,

Taju Thompson"
