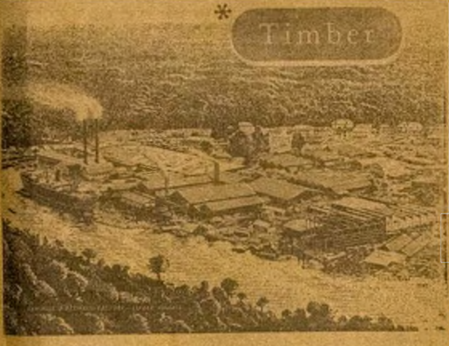
FACETS OF ENTERPRISE



Under Government licence and long-term forestry agreements, [illegible] tons of logs pass yearly through The United Africa Company's sawmill and plywood plant at Sapele, to be loaded there [illegible] into the waiting ships. This enterprise creates employment for [illegible] persons, and yields [illegible] annually in revenue to the Native Administration and Central Government. At Samreboi in the Gold Coast, [illegible] square mile concession, another sawmill is nearing completion. To serve it [illegible] miles of new roads and nearly a mile of bridges are being constructed.

So, through her timber, West Africa gains not only in exportable produce and material for her own building programme, but also in revenue and extensive opening up of the country.

Dowries May Be Crime In India

LONDON— The giving of a dowry to a bride in India may become a crime punishable by imprisonment if Bills introduced by women in the Indian Parliament are passed.

Two separate Bills, introduced by Shrimati Uma Nehru and Shrimati Jayashree Rabi, seek to declare the dowry system illegal and prescribe penalties both for giving and receiving dowries, the punishment in the second case being heavier.

No legal ban on the dowry system is placed in the third Bill (sponsored by Shrimati Durgabai), its sole object being to ensure that the dowry remains the property of the bride, either in her own possession or in trust.

A dowry is defined in the Bills sponsored by Shrimati Uma Nehru and Shrimati Durgabai as any property transferred or agreed to be transferred as part of the contract of any betrothal or marriage between one party and another, excepting gifts not exceeding one thousand rupees. The penalty for taking dowry under the Bills extends from one month to six months simple imprisonment or a fine, or both.

New Research For World Paper Shortage

WASHINGTON— Because of the shortage of wood-pulp paper throughout the world, a laboratory in the United States is devoting its research to finding new ways of commercially manufacturing paper from substitute raw materials. Known as the Herty Foundation Laboratory, this nonprofit research organization located in the southern State of Georgia performs experiments for paper companies in the United States and other countries.

Recent projects at the laboratory include tests on native New Zealand woods, on Mexican pine, and on Bango reed cane and grass from East Africa. The incense tree of India, or BOSWELLIA SERRATA, has been tested for a paper mill in in India. Extensive experiments with bamboo from Ecuador and India and also on sal wood, or SHOREA ROBUSTA, from from India have been made. Additional experiments are planned for this year.

The most successful venture so far has been withbamboo Fine-grade book, bond, and tissue papers have been manufactured from its fiber. Bamboo requires 10 years to grow to commercial size, but then two-thirds of the crop can be cut each year. At the request of a business group in India, the the Herty Laboratory has demonstrated that standard Newsprint can be made from 25 percent bamboo and 75 percent ral wood

A fine-grade paper has been produced from African Bango reed, a cane plant that yields two crops a year. A heavy-corrugated paper has been made from chicken feathers, and the pulp from feathers also has been blended successfully with other fibers to make an inexpensive commercial paper.

The laboratory has done basic research in producing paper paper products from cotton plant stems and also from a sugar cane residue called bagass. A heavy paper has been made from cotton stems and several paper products, including newsprint, have been produced from bagesse.
