ON AFRICA AND BRITAIN:

Prime Minister Inter-viewed In BBC African Service

LONDON—Britain's Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, recently answered a wide range of questions about Africa in the BBC African Service programme FOCUS ON AFRICA.

He was interviewed by Isaac Wamala of Uganda, who spoke of African countries like Nigeria, that were intimately related to Britain through the Commonwealth. What role, he said, could these countries best play in the Commonwealth?

We have all been concentrating, replied Sir Alec on the African countries being able to develop their own economies and to be allowed to be independent and free in doing so. If Britain can assist East African or West African countries to maintain their independence and develop their property that is certainly our intention.

Trade, not Aid

Among other questions in this BBC interview was one about the gap between the rich and poor nations of the world. What part could Britain play to try to close this gap?

Sir Alec answered that he thought that Britain invests a great deal of money in Africa, which amounted to about £300,000,000 a year, which was quite a lot. We want to increase that, but we can only increase it if we increase our own wealth, of course, and that too is our purpose.

But I think continued Sir Alec, the broad answer to your question is that trade is better than aid. One aspect of trade is of course the possibility of making commodity agreements which will help the producers of food and raw materials. And that we are going to explore in GATT but by and large, I think, we want to keep our markets as open as we possibly can for Commonwealth goods.

I.K. Dairo In London

Nigeria hit Britain with a bang at the weekend when I.K. Dairo and his Blue Spot band gained a big success with their first-over performances in the country.

Their first engagement on Friday, July 17, drew the crowds to St. Pancras Town Hall, London, and they followed this by playing to a packed house at the YMCA hall in Leicester the following evening.

St. Pancras was thronged with hundreds of Nigerians and British fans in carnival mood. Many of the Nigerian men and most of the women wore national dress the dance and a large number of them had travelled from as far afield as Liverpool, Manchester and Leicester.

Inside the crowded hall the band played highlife and "hotted up" traditional themes with verve to keep the dancers busily swinging.

Other Africans were much in evidence too—hailing from Ghana, Sierra Leone and East Africa.

"This is a very encouraging start to the band's six week tour of Britain and we could easily have filled a larger hall," Mr. Bayo Omoniyi, director of publicity for the visit, told an LPS correspondent. Mr. Omoniyi, who comes from Ilesha, is studying economic in London.

One of the organisers in Leicester was Mr. Samuel Oriogun of Ilesha, who has been in Britain for four years and is studying for Association of the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

Mr. Isaac Wamala interviewed Sir Douglas-Home the British Prime Minister in BBC African Service.
